a homination for re-election this year Mayor Taggart saw the handwriting on the wall. Naturally, he would prefer that Taggartism should be beaten under another leader than himself.

The situation in South Africa is becoming grave indeed for England when so conservative a journal as the Naval and Military Gazette recommends conscription as the only means of supplying Lord Kitchener with men enough.

So large a majority of the intelligent voters of Indianapolis are not satisfied fairs that, if they should vote the Republican ticket, it will be elected by a plurality of several thousand.

Mayor Taggart points with pride to the fact that under contracts made during his administrations four corporations which have municipal franchises of enormous value are paying the city $56,411 a year. If they were paying three or four times as much they would still have a good bar-

The putting of several hundred men at work in the streets just before the election, as has been done before every election since Mr. Taggart has been mayor, is a scandalous performance-as much a purchase of votes as it would be to take the money from the city treasury and purchase votes at $2 or $3 a head.

It is worth while to note that the son of President Roosevelt will attend the public schools in Washington. The President is a stanch advocate of the public schools as affording the best training for American citizenship. So he carries his dectrine into effect by having his son go to the public school and there get his training in democracy, in individual rights and individual worth.

The decision of the Circuit Court at Muncie holding the weekly payment of wages law constitutional is undoubtedly correct as to all cases in which there is no contract to the contrary. It may be questioned, however, whether the Legislature car interfere with the private right of contract to the extent of forbidding an employer and his employes from agreeing to a different mode of payment than weekly if they wish to do so.

It addressing a mixed-in fact, a very mixed-audience a few nights ago, Mayor Taggart said: "Do you want the laws enforced to the letter? Rather shouldn't some discretion be exercised? The law has no discretion." An executive officer, who is sworn to see that the laws are enforced, takes very untenable ground when he talks about exercising discretion in the matter, and when he recommends that policy to a mixed audience he is sowing seeds that may bear very dangerous fruit.

The people of this city are so used to responding promptly and liberally in the promotion of local enterprises that they will not need much urging to induce them to co-operate in making the approaching carnival a brilliant success. An event of this kind deserves support, not merely for the crowd of people it brings, but for the spirit of fun which it generates and the temporary putting of pleasure above business-a spirit, by the way, which should be encouraged to the utmost limit of propriety, but not beyond it. Persons outside of the city can rest assured that all the attractions promised will be offered, and emembering, as well as participating in. Its management is in the hands of some of our leading business men, who are accustomed to doing things, and not by halves, either.

LOOKING TO INDIANAPOLIS REPUB-LICANS.

Republicans in this city, if they were readers of all the Republican papers over the State, would be surprised to note the interest the party generally is taking in the coming election. They all feel that the election next Tuesday is the first battle in the campaign of 1902, and they say that if the Republicans of Indianapolis do not do their duty in the municipal election Marion county need not present any candidates for nomination at the next Republican state convention, as they will find little favor on the part of those who believe that the Republicans of Indianapolis can and should wrest the management of the city from the hands of men who not only always fight the Republican party, but fight it malignantly. Neither is it surprising that in cleaning up the remains of the late insurrection and pacifying a recently hos-It is the opinion of many that in declining | tile people some such unexpected disasters should occur. Many far greater ones have happened in our dealings with the American Indians, but they did not affect the policy of the government. Individuals die, but nations go on. We may mourn for the brave men who are surprised and overpowered by Filipino insurgents, but it is a small episode in a large plan, and should not have, and, of course, will not have any effect on the policy of the government in dealing with the islands and people. If the incident had occurred during the last presidential campaign it would have been cited as proof of the unconquerable determinawith the present management of city af- | tion of the people to be free and of the hopelessness of the task we had undertaken. Now no person of any intelligence regards it in that light any more than any of the Indian massacres of whites in recent years were so regarded. The important point is that we have made and are making wonderful progress in restoring order and establishing government in the Philippines. The insurgents and the disaffected people are a mere handful, compared with the mass of the population who are now not only peaceable and friendly, but exceedingly anxious to prove themselves worthy of enjoying the protection and benefits of American government. As a people we are apt to be impatient in expecting too rapid progress in the accomplishment of great national results. We want things done in a month that should take a year. or in a year that should require a dozen. No other government ever accomplished Mayor Taggart, in one of his beer meet- anything like as much on similar lines as superstructure, but the work cannot be done in a day. There may even be more lives lost in the Philippines, though we may reasonably hope not, but if there are we may be sure the government is making steady progress towards a consummation that will redound to the credit of the Nation and the welfare of mankind. Much as the recent disaster is to be regretted it will figure in history as an inconsequential in-

The triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, which meets at San Francisco to-day, will excite the interest that naturally attaches to the highest ecclesiastical body of a great and progressive church. The convention is composed of a House of Bishops, which sits behind closed doors, and a House of Deputies, composed of lay delegates, which holds open sessions. Both bodies will embrace many men of national prominence. The convention will have to deal with many questions of peculiar interest to the church, and some of even broader interest.

The liability already incurred was regarded as moderate, considering the quality of the attractions. The Hale Fire Company from Kansas City, the Pain spectacle, "Destruction of Pompeii," electrical fountain, Japanese theater and other features did not aggregate what might have been expected. In addition to this a great many subscriptions to the guarantee fund were reported, but not having been officially turned in public generally in the matter was made evident by the reports of chairmen of subcommittees. Also a spirit of liberality has been shown in giving prizes for the grotesque parade, Chairman Seguin reporting that he solicited prizes from thirteen merchants and had obtained prizes without effort from twelve of them.

THE FLOWER PARADE. The progress of the flower parade is very satisfactory. The carnival officials have secured the services of J. A. Gorman, who originated the flower parades in Santa Barbara, Cal., where natural flowers are used. He is to have charge of this parade, and all wishing to enter vehicles, by consulting him at headquarters, will be supplied with sketches and advice as to an effective display. Mr. Gorman will also devise a system of general decoration, ising the colors adopted for the carnival last year. His long experience in this work is highly valued by the committee. His work was conspicuous at the world's fair and in many flower parades in various was the magnificent decoration of the

This troupe, known as Kitamura's, was a distinct hit and one of the most profitable entertainments at the incinnati Carnival and many other points. It includes fifteen performers, who do acrobatic feats, jugglery and balancing. The company includes men, women and children, and their marvelous performances are expected to be one of the Midway SCHEME OF DECORATION.

A committee was also prointed to arrange for a partial suspension of the schools during carnival week. This organization has a reputation for effective zouave drilling and in the grotesque parade will give comical reproductions of wall scaling and other features. The directors will give the organization conspicuous work during the entire week. The Cincinnati Zooligical Garden has offered Indianapolis an elephant for carnival week. neighborhood. By that time an alarm had been raised at the camp and the military police were on the track of the escaped Boers. The search continued for two days and nights, soldiers, sailors, militiamen and civilians taking part in it. One prisoner was retaken Monday morning while incautiously inquiring on the public road for the house recaptured late that evening. All three were lodged in the military prison at St.
